'Relic' by Ted Hughes is a poem of modern literature that talks about the metaphorical relics of the sea. Relic means a person or thing that has survived in an earlier time but is now outmoded or dead. Hence, the "jawbone" in the first line of the poem is that relic that the poet centers his discussion in the poem.

Still, for parents and for the three or four districts out there that do fully fund their schools, here's my thought. Without a larger context, experiencing poetry solely through prefab formal structures like haikus, acrostics, cinquains and diamante poems could make students feel like poetry is just some sadistic fiend's attempt to make English even more complex and irritating.
